REPLY MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT UNITED STATES OF AMERICA'S MOTION TO DISMISS

Date: August 24, 2009
Time: 8:30 a.m.

21 INTRODUCTION

22 Plaintiffs invite the Court to make broad rulings unnecessarily. The Court should decline 23 that invitation for a number of reasons. This case can and should be decided on much narrower 24 grounds – plaintiffs' failure to establish the Court's jurisdiction over this action and plaintiffs'
25 inability to demonstrate that they have standing to pursue their claims. The plaintiffs have not 26 shown that any other state has refused to recognize their California marriage, and they do not allege 27 that the federal definitions of "marriage" and "spouse" set forth in DOMA have been applied to them 28 (e.g., plaintiffs do not allege that they have applied for and been denied any federal benefits because

1 of the operation of DOMA). Nothing in plaintiffs' opposition to the United States' motion to dismiss 2 – to the extent it addresses the issues at all – undercuts either of these threshold arguments (Doc.
3 40).¹ Thus, on the issues of jurisdiction and standing alone, without even reaching the merits, this 4 case should be dismissed.

5 With respect to the merits, this Administration does not support DOMA as a matter of policy, 6 believes that it is discriminatory, and supports its repeal. Consistent with the rule of law, however, 7 the Department of Justice has long followed the practice of defending federal statutes as long as 8 reasonable arguments can be made in support of their constitutionality, even if the Department 9 disagrees with a particular statute as a policy matter, as it does here.² And in this case, plaintiffs'
10 constitutional claims are unavailing. In their opposition brief, plaintiffs offer only a token response 11 to the United States' arguments on the merits. Indeed, they say nothing at all in response to the 12 arguments concerning their "full faith and credit," right to travel, right to privacy, First Amendment, 13 or Ninth Amendment claims. On that basis alone, those claims should be dismissed.

14 Accordingly, the present motion to dismiss should be granted.

15 ARGUMENT

16 I. This Court Lacks Jurisdiction Over Plaintiffs' Claims Against 17 the United States Because the State Court Lacked Jurisdiction

18 Plaintiffs do not dispute that a federal court, after removal of a case from state court, "has no 19 more jurisdiction than the state court" did before removal, see Salveson v. Western States Bankcard
20 Ass'n, 731 F.2d 1423, 1431 (9th Cir. 1984), nor that the Superior Court of California for the County

22 ¹ Much of plaintiffs' opposition is irrelevant to the United States' motion to dismiss.
23 Specifically, four of the memorandum's six pages are a verbatim repetition of plaintiffs' opposition
24 (Doc. 33) to the State of California's motion to dismiss in this action, focusing on issues of state 25 sovereign immunity that are inapplicable here.

26 ² This longstanding and bipartisan tradition accords the respect appropriately due to a co-
27 equal branch of government and ensures that subsequent administrations will faithfully defend laws 28 with which they may disagree on policy grounds.

1 of Orange lacked jurisdiction over plaintiffs' claims in this case before removal. See Powelson v.
 2 United States, 150 F.3d 1103, 1105 (9th Cir. 1998) (dismissing removed matter where "[t]he 3 government [had] not waived its immunity from suit in state courts"); Nebraska v. Bentson, 146 F.3d
 4 676, 679 (9th Cir. 1998) ("Without an express waiver of the IRS's sovereign immunity as an agency
 5 of the United States, the state court lacked jurisdiction."). Plaintiffs' only response to these 6 principles is to allege that the parties herein "understood" between themselves that this action would 7 initially be filed in state court, followed by removal to this Court by the United States (Doc. 40 at 2).
 8 That, however, is inaccurate.³ As explained in the accompanying declaration, the United States at no 9 time agreed to the initial filing of this action in state court, and counsel for the parties did not 10 communicate regarding removal of the case to federal court until after the United States had 11 transmitted its Notice of Removal to this Court. (See Declaration of W. Scott Simpson ¶¶ 2-4 12 (Attachment 1 hereto).) Thus, there was no "understanding" between the parties regarding the filing 13 of this action in state court or its removal to this Court. In any event, even if there had been such an 14 "understanding" between counsel, it could not create jurisdiction in this Court contrary to the 15 established principles set forth above. See United States v. New York Rayon Importing Co., 329
 16 U.S. 654, 660, 67 S. Ct. 601, 604, 91 L.Ed. 577 (1947) ("[O]fficers of the United States possess no
 17 power through their actions to . . . confer jurisdiction on a court in the absence of some express 18 provision by Congress."); see also United States v. Judge, 944 F.2d 523, 525 (9th Cir. 1991) ("[I]t is 19 well-established that litigants cannot confer [subject matter] jurisdiction by consent where none 20 exists.").

21 II. Plaintiffs' Claims and Allegations Against the United 22 States Must Be Dismissed for Lack of Standing

23 Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge either section of DOMA. Section 2 provides that one 24 state need not recognize a same-sex marriage performed under the laws of another state. 28 U.S.C.

25 ³ Plaintiffs also assert that the United States has "inadvertently led [this Court] to 26 misunderstand why Plaintiffs filed in State court," by "fail[ing] to mention" plaintiffs' state court 27 filing (Doc. 40 at 2). That is also incorrect, as the United States' motion to dismiss sets forth in 28 detail the facts regarding plaintiffs' attempted filing in this Court, the denial of in forma pauperis status, and the subsequent filing in state court (Doc. 25 at 8).

1 § 1738C. Plaintiffs are married under the laws of California, but they are residents of California and 2 do not allege that any other state has refused to recognize their marriage (Complaint ¶¶ 9, 10).
 3 Section 3 of DOMA defines the words "marriage" and "spouse" for purposes of federal law, but 4 plaintiffs do not allege that that definition has ever been applied to them. 1 U.S.C. § 7.⁴

5 Plaintiffs' only response in support of standing is to assert that "the Ninth Circuit ruled [in 6 Smelt v. County of Orange, 447 F.3d 673 (9th Cir. 2006)] that if Smelt and Hammer were married 7 they had standing to address DOMA in it's [sic] entirety" (Doc. 40 at 7). But that is a misreading of 8 the Court of Appeals' decision, and a misunderstanding of the requirements for standing. Regarding 9 plaintiffs' lack of standing to challenge Section 2, the court said, "In sum, while Section 2 may affect 10 someone who has been declared married in some state, Smelt and Hammer do not come within that 11 category of people." Smelt, 447 F.3d at 683 (emphasis added). In other words, marriage was a 12 necessary, but not a sufficient, circumstance for challenging Section 2. That also is stated in this 13 Court's opinion granting summary judgment to the defendants:

14 Plaintiffs . . . have not shown they will suffer an imminent injury as a 15 result of section 2. They do not claim to have plans or a desire to get 16 married in Massachusetts or elsewhere and attempt to have the 17 marriage recognized in California. They do not claim to have plans to 18 seek recognition of their eventual California marriage in another state.
 Without definite plans to engage in an act that will cause them to suffer an injury in fact, Plaintiffs have not established an imminent injury sufficient to confer standing to challenge section 2.

19 Smelt v. County of Orange, 374 F. Supp. 2d 861, 871 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (emphasis added). Because 20 plaintiffs "do not claim to have plans to seek recognition of their . . . California marriage in another 21 state," they still lack standing to challenge Section 2.

22 Furthermore, plaintiffs' argument ignores the Court of Appeals' separate holding regarding 23 plaintiffs' lack of standing to challenge Section 3, the definitional section. In that regard, the Court 24 said:

25 In fact, [plaintiffs] do not suggest that they have applied for any federal benefits, 26 much less been denied any at this point. That they might someday be married under 27 ⁴ The Court has dismissed plaintiffs' claims against the State of California in this case for 28 lack of standing (Doc. 36).

1 the law of some state or ask for some federal benefit which they are denied is not 2 enough.

3 Smelt, 447 F.3d at 684 (citations omitted) (emphasis added). These principles apply regardless of 4 plaintiffs' marital status. They still have "not suggest[ed] that they have applied for any federal 5 benefits, much less been denied any at this point." Id. Thus, plaintiffs lack standing to challenge 6 Section 3. Accordingly, the instant motion to dismiss should be granted.

7 III. Plaintiffs' Equal Protection and Due Process Claims Must Be 8 Dismissed Because DOMA Survives Rational Basis Review

9 Plaintiffs' equal protection and due process claims raise several issues, all of which were 10 addressed in the United States' motion to dismiss. As established in the government's opening 11 memorandum, federal courts have unanimously upheld the constitutionality of DOMA.⁵ Plaintiffs' 12 only response to the government's arguments in favor of dismissal is to assert, without elaboration, 13 that "same gender marriage is a . . . fundamental right" such that DOMA is subject to "heightened 14 scrutiny," and to imply that DOMA constitutes "gender discrimination" (Doc. 40 at 4, 5). The 15 United States refuted these assertions in its opening memorandum.

16 Courts have held that challenges to DOMA are subject to rational basis review.⁶ Under that 17 deferential standard of review, this Court should find that Congress could reasonably have 18 concluded that there is a legitimate government interest in maintaining the status quo regarding the 19 distribution of federal benefits in the face of serious and fluid policy differences in and among the 20 states. That there is now a debate taking place in this country about same-sex marriage does not 21 make Congress's belief in this regard any less rational. Basic federalism principles allowed 22 Congress in 1996, and allow Congress now, to take this uniform approach based on a traditional 23 ⁵ See In re Kandu, 315 B.R. 123, 140 (Bankr. D. Wash. 2004); Wilson v. Ake, 354 F. Supp.

24 2d 1298, 1307 (M.D. Fla. 2005); Hunt v. Ake, Case No. 04-1852 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 20, 2005); Smelt v.
25 County of Orange, 374 F. Supp. 2d 861, 879 (C.D. Cal. 2005); see also Bishop v. Oklahoma, 447
26 F. Supp. 2d 1239, 1252 (N.D. Okla. 2006), rev'd on other grounds, No. 06-5188, 2009 WL 1566802 (10th Cir. June 5, 2009).

27 ⁶ As noted in the government's opening brief, under existing Ninth Circuit precedent, 28 plaintiffs' claims are subject to rational basis review (Doc. 25 at 25-32). Courts that have considered constitutional challenges to DOMA have applied a rational basis test (see supra n.5).

1 definition of marriage that all 50 states recognize while the states grapple with the emerging debate
2 over same-sex marriage. Under rational basis review, Congress can reasonably take the view that it 3 wishes to wait to see how these issues are resolved at the state level before extending federal 4 benefits to marriages that were not recognized in any state when Congress tied eligibility for those 5 benefits to marital status.

6 Unlike the intervenors here, the government does not contend that there are legitimate 7 government interests in "creating a legal structure that promotes the raising of children by both of 8 their biological parents" or that the government's interest in "responsible procreation" justifies 9 Congress's decision to define marriage as a union between one man and one woman (Doc. 42 at 8-9).
10 Since DOMA was enacted, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Psychological 11 Association, the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, the American Medical 12 Association, and the Child Welfare League of America have issued policies opposing restrictions on 13 lesbian and gay parenting because they concluded, based on numerous studies, that children raised 14 by gay and lesbian parents are as likely to be well-adjusted as children raised by heterosexual
15 parents.⁷ Furthermore, in Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 605 (2003), Justice Scalia acknow-
16 ledged in his dissent that encouraging procreation would not be a rational basis for limiting marriage 17 to opposite-sex couples under the reasoning of the Lawrence majority opinion – which, of course, is 18 the prevailing law – because "the sterile and the elderly are allowed to marry." For these reasons, 19 the United States does not believe that DOMA is rationally related to any legitimate government

1 interests in procreation and child-rearing and is therefore not relying upon any such interests to 2 defend DOMA's constitutionality.

3 IV. Plaintiffs Have Conceded the United States' Motion to 4 Dismiss As to All of Their Other Claims

5 Plaintiffs' response says nothing about any of their other claims – under the Full Faith and 6 Credit Clause, the right to travel, the right to privacy, the First Amendment, and the Ninth 7 Amendment – all of which the United States fully addressed in its motion to dismiss. Given that 8 plaintiffs have not responded to the United States' arguments on those claims, such arguments must 9 be taken as conceded. See adidas-America, Inc. v. Payless Shoesource, Inc., 546 F. Supp. 2d 1029, 10 1076 (D. Or. 2008) (failing to respond to opponent's argument constitutes conceding argument);
11 Canatella v. Stovitz, 365 F. Supp. 2d 1064, 1083-84 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (same); Southern Nevada 12 Shell Dealers Ass'n v. Shell Oil Co., 725 F. Supp. 1104, 1109 (D. Nev. 1989) (same). Thus, the 13 Court can and should dismiss those claims on this basis alone.

14 CONCLUSION

15 Accordingly, the United States' motion to dismiss should be granted, and all of plaintiffs' 16 claims against the United States should be dismissed with prejudice.
